What are capital credits?

As a member-owned cooperative, Prairie Land does not earn profits. Instead, if revenues exceed the cost of doing business (i.e. expenses), the co-op has earned "margins." These margins are allocated to active members in a ratio proportionate to the amount of electricity the member purchased during the year that margins were earned. These allocated portions are called capital credits.

Are capital credit retirements taxable?

Members receiving capital credit retirements in excess of $600 may receive a Form 1099 from Prairie Land.

We suggest seeking the advice of a tax professional for specific questions.

What is the difference between allocated and retired capital credits?

Allocated capital credits are the amounts assigned to each member who was billed for service during a year in which margins were earned. While the credits are assigned to members, they are retained by the co-op for a period of time – approximately 20 to 25 years – and are used as capital, which reduces Prairie Land's need to borrow money. Allocated capital credits reflect your ownership in Prairie Land. When capital credits are eventually retired, Prairie Land will issue the retirement via check or bill credit.
